THE WORLD'S SERIES

By Frank G. Menke, International News Service

What a strange contrast is furnished by a comparison of Connie Mack and George Stallings, the two men who will lead the rival teams into battle for the highest honors in baseball. How different are their temperaments, their ways and their methods!

Connie Mack, gentle, soft-voiced and fatherly in his attitude toward his players, never has been known to speak an unkind word to them on or off the ball field. Stallings, a human dynamo, with a tongue like a lash, rarely permits his men to go through a game without cursing them to the full limit of his wonderful vocabulary.

Stallings has the theory that only by driving his players every moment during the game are results accomplished. From the moment that "play ball" rings across the field until the last man is out in the ninth, Stallings continues to apply the lash. When on the field, every error that one of his players makes that is of an inexcusable nature brings forth a caustic and immediate reprimand from the great leader of the Boston team.

Stallings applies his verbal abuse to stars and mediocre players alike. He spares none. And the strange part of it all, Stallings' abuse of his players has caused them to feel any bitterness toward him, for when the game is over Stallings changes front. He is the pal, the brother of each of his players.

Stallings never rebukes a player twice for the same error. He doesn't dig into the past—doesn't bring up old scores. When he has punished a player once for some blunder it's the end of it. Stallings' eye speaks his place—has relieved his feelings and the incident is closed.

Every man on the Boston club has come to love Stallings. And not one of the men on the whole team has escaped a tongue lashing from Stallings—not one has escaped a call down; couched in scorching language. The Boston players understand Stallings. They know that his sternness toward them on the ball field is caused only through his fervent ambition to win. They have come to take his rebuke without experiencing any bitterness of feeling thereafter.

Stallings is a driver—even a harder driver than McGraw, who held the driving honors until this year. Stallings is after his men every minute. Nothing escapes his eye. If one of his men makes a "bone" play Stallings meets him as he approaches the bench and that player is certain to get "this" without delay.

But Stallings is just as ready with his praise for a good play as he is with abuse for a bad one. If one of his men makes a brilliant catch or throw or smashes out a long hit that aids the Braves' chances for victory, Stallings rushes out from the bench to meet him as he comes in and welcomes him with all the enthusiasm in his system.

Mack, in contrast, is at all times the most inconspicuous man on the Athletics' bench. He is ever calm and quiet. No matter how great a blunder his players may have made, no matter how poorly they play, Mack never has a word of condemnation. And when one or another of his men make some brilliant play, Mack's feelings never run riot. He may greet his player with a smile, a pat on the back or a "Fine work boy," but that usually is the extent of his greeting. No Athletics players ever are greeted with a few bear hugs, a dozen terrific slaps on the back and a lengthy speech of praise as are the Braves when they do some great work.

Mack was born in Brookfield, Mass., in 1862. He began his baseball career with the Meriden, Conn., club in 1884. He played with Hartford, Conn., in 1885 and 1886, with Washington in 1887, 1888, and 1889 and with Buffalo in 1890. From 1891 to 1896 he played with Pittsburgh, managing that club from August, 1894, to 1896. From 1897 to 1898 he managed the Milwaukee club in the Western league. In 1899 he went to Philadelphia and organized the Athletics. He has been there since. He owns half of the stock in the club.

Mack won the American league championship in 1902, 1905, 1910, 1911, 1913 and 1914. He won the world's series in 1910, 1911 and 1912. Stallings was born in Haddock, Ga., in 1868. He never made any great record as a player, but as a manager he has a wonderful record. He won the pennants in 1891 and 1892 for the Santos Rey, Cal. team. Then he went to Augusta, Ga., and won a pennant for them in 1893, going to Nashville in 1895 and winning the pennant there. In 1894 and 1906 he won pennants for Buffalo, N. Y. clubs. Six times from 1891 to 1906 he won a pennant and in six other years his club finished second, certainly a good showing.

Stallings managed the New York Yankees in 1911 and brought them from the bottom well into the first division. But he was deposed—and the club never has amounted to anything since. Stallings took hold of the Braves in 1913. They looked like a hopeless tail-end proposition. He landed them in fifth place despite the fact that he was away from them for quite a time owing to illness. What he has done with 1914 Braves is history.

AMUSEMENTS

DENT MOWREY, PIANIST.

The recital given in Bartlett hall, Friday evening, by Mr. Dent Mowrey, the distinguished young American virtuoso, should draw a full house.

The Standard, of Ogden, Utah, recently printed the following: "Unquestionably the finest exhibition of polished technique ever heard in Ogden," was the consensus of opinion of the cultured audience which gathered at the Tabernacle last night concerning the work of Dent Mowrey. His command of technique and play of power was a revelation. Not alone did he prove his right to recognition as an international artist by his work as a performer, but through the presentation of several of his own compositions. Of these, his "Spanish Gypsy Dance" and "Humoresque" were probably the most enjoyed, while from a technical standpoint the faultless playing of his heavy churched "Bride Op. 16, No. 1" would probably be given precedence.

Appreciation reached its full volume at the close of the second number and from then on his reception was a triumph.

BUTLER THEATER.

At the Butler theater tonight an unusually strong programme will be shown, as follows: A Self-split-reel showing two comedies, "A Love Fiasco" and "Breaking Into Jail," "New York Police Carnival," held at Brighton Beach racetrack, and a two-reel Vitaphone comedy featuring Sidney Drew in "Henry Stanley, the Lion-Killer." He looks the part, but it is evident he is only playing the part. Two circus bears break loose and Stanley is called upon to show his prowess. He has a terrible time doing it, and comes near making a fatal error. Fortune favors him and he manages to chase the bears away, after they have chased him and given him the scare of his life. If you want to see how he got away with a grandstand play, made himself a hero and won a pretty girl, come to the Butler to night. Tomorrow—"The Stuff Dreams Are Made Of," a two-reel Edison comedy, and Hearst-Seigel Weekly.
